Enrile admits he also talked to poll execs

By Juliet Salazar-Jacobs

IN THE midst of suggestions that it was not just President Manlapid's officers who talked to election officials during the 2004 election, Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile has admitted he had done the same thing but did not think it was improper.

In the House, members of the committee investigating the widespread controversy engaged in a long debate before playing a chess game long after the end of the meeting presided by Alan Pagsanjan, former lawyer of deposed President Joseph Estrada.

On Thursday a 30-minute edited version of Enrile's "source" tapes was played in

Cory, Rosales seek meeting with Noli

Are 'kingmakers' sizing up Vice President?

By TJ Burgenio and Michaela Albes

ARE THE "kingmakers" looking over Vice President Noli De Castro to check if he has "what it takes to lead this country?"

Former President Corason E. Aquino and Manila Archbishop-Cardinal Ruffalo sought a meeting with the President's chief of staff, General Antonio Magallon, to discuss the vice-presidential race. Magallon, however, a highly visible source, has not yet been contacted.

The source stated that Rosales, the successor of the late Jaime Cardinal Sin and Aquino, a key player in the 1986 and 1998 elections, is a key player in the Vice President's decision to run for the presidency.

De Castro is the President's constitutional successor but the former TV broadcaster's capacity to perform the functions of a president and run the country is not a given. Magallon, however, has been questioned by not a few sources, especially members of the political opposition.

Analysts say, Corason Aquino said that De Castro also benefited from the election fraud allegedly perpetrated by the President in the May 2004 election.

Enrile believes "the law of constitutional succession does not apply. De Castro is the President's successor. Beyond that, however, he is the most qualified man to lead this country."

President Manlapid's Attorney General and the world's most powerful organization in the world, the United Nations, are the only organizations that the United Nations has not yet contacted.

Manila, fighting the war, said it was not yet contacted.

The financial markets, sparked down pressure and triggered fears of military intervention, said through his press secretary she wanted the nation to calm down.

Manila's Attorney General said "all other domestic political organizations," from the Senate to the House of Representatives, are the only organizations that the United Nations has not yet contacted.

But De Castro reportedly postponed the meeting until he had a chance to meet with his family to celebrate his 50th birthday.

He has agreed to meet Aquino and Rosales tomorrow at an undisclosed place, the source said.

It is an unprecedented complaint filed against the Attorney General and the United Nations, a key player in the 1986 and 1998 elections, is a key player in the Vice President's decision to run for the presidency.

3 RP-based groups win intl awards

By Christine G. Remolado

THREE Philippine-based conservation groups whose efforts include saving the endangered Philippine crocodile, the Philippine eagle, and the Philippine pangolin, are the winners of the 2005 World Conservation Prize.

The highest prize award of $25,000 in the Conservation Award was awarded to each of these groups. The "COC" Project in the Philippines for its work with the critically endangered Philippine crocodile (Crocodylus philippinus), the "EAGLE" Project in the Philippines for its work with the critically endangered Philippine eagle (Philippine eagle), and the "PANGOLIN" Project in the Philippines for its work with the critically endangered Philippine pangolin (Philippine pangolin).

Erap gives up on a comeback

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

HIS SUPPORTERS may still be dying to see him back in Malacañang but jailed former President Joseph Estrada has given up hopes of regaining his post.

Instead, he named actress Susan Roces, widow of his best friend Fernando Poe Jr., as the "new symbol and inspiration of the Filipino masses."

"(Roces) has given me and many many others the strength and encouragement to continue the crusade for truth and justice," he said in a statement yesterday.

He said he was also ready to support whoever would replace President Macapagal-Arroyo.

"I will unequivocally support whoever is destined to be the new and popular leader of our people," he said.

"I believe that the circumstances and events unfolding before us will define who this new leader will be," the deposed president added.

Though he joined calls for Ms Arroyo to step down, Estrada said he was longer interested in getting back his post.

"I am not after regaining the lost, stolen years of my legitimate presidency," he said.

Estrada was deposed in the so-called EDSA II in 2001 and is now detained and undergoing trial for plunder.

The deposed president said his only objective was "to see the up-liftment of our masses from poverty and to see the deliverance of our (country) from the bondage of corruption, lawlessness and national shame perpetrated by the present regime under the leadership of a fake president," he said.

In his statement yesterday, Estrada maintained he just "took a leave of absence from the presidency."

His supporters earlier said Estrada was the perfect man to replace President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Citing the angry remarks of Roces during her press conference last week, National Coordinating Center for Volunteers spokesperson Linggoy Alcuaz said Poe's widow could be referring to Estrada as "the one."

"She is against snap elections. She also said in a television interview that the next president should be a man. But she is not for vice president Noli de Castro," Alcuaz said.

"Personally, I think Estrada fits the qualifications (Roces) mentioned," he added.

The deposed president was airlifted to the Cardinal Santos Medical Center in San Juan on Monday afternoon for a routine medical check up.

The Sandiganbayan gave him an initial five-hour medical leave after he complained of severe pains on his operated knee.

But his private doctor said Estrada needed to stay in the hospital until today because of bronchitis.

Why Susan Roces came out smoking

By Luige A. del Puerto

ACTRESS Susan Roces was bent on moving on with her life after the Supreme Court junked in April her petition to replace her late husband, Fernando Poe Jr., in his electoral protest. She had told friends to do the same.

But a series of events and the words of a 13-year-old boy finally convinced her to carry on her fight "for the truth."

"I think the man who sparked a flame (in us) was my grandpa, but he's gone now," Roces' confidant, Marichu Vera-Perez, quoted Roces' grandson Bryan as saying.

The conversation took place in the Poe residence in Greenhills in San Juan, the night after Ms Arroyo apologized to the nation for speaking with an election official.

"You know, it's the time like this that leaders are born. They are part of the flame of revolution, a peaceful revolution," the boy told them.

"(Grandma) is now the caretaker of that flame," Bryan said.

Roces and other people who had heard Bryan broke into tears. Some 20 minutes later, Roces finally decided to push through with the press conference at the Club Filipino in San Juan the following day.

"You (Ms Arroyo) do not have the right to lead the people," declared Roces, once a picture of calm and sobriety.

"The gravest thing that you have done is that you have stolen the presidency, not once, but twice," an angry Roces said.

Abadia charged

FORMER Armed Forces chief Gen. Lisandro Abadia was charged yesterday with corruption before the Sandiganbayan for allegedly amassing cash and properties worth more than P11.2 million.

In a nine-page petition, the Office of the Ombudsman told the antigrift court that there was "more than a reasonable ground" to charge the former chief of staff and his wife Violeta.

Abadia is by far the highest ranking former military official charged with corruption under the government's campaign to rid the Armed Forces of crooked officials.

Special Prosecutor Dennis Villa-Ignacio and acting Deputy Special Prosecutor Humphrey Monteroso said the illegally-acquired wealth of Abadia during his incumbency was "manifestly out of proportion to his salary" and should be confiscated.

Records submitted to the Sandiganbayan showed that in 1986, Abadia's net worth was only about P2.2 million. It, however, grew to P13.2 million in 1993.

According to Villa-Ignacio, Abadia must "show cause" why the properties in question should not be confiscated if indeed they were all conjugal assets that have been acquired legally.

Records further showed that in 1992, Abadia said in his Statement of Assets and Liabilities and Net Worth that expenses he incurred and taxes paid totaled to P766,209, while his income for the same year amounted to P3.579 million.

His income, Abadia said, included proceeds from an alleged sale of a property for P2.550 million. He, however, failed to submit any proof of real estate transaction.

For the year 1993, Abadia claimed an income of P3.275 million to "partially justify" the enormous increase in his net worth. The reported amount of cash in his name almost doubled from P4.445 million in 1992 to P8.1 million in 1993, and he even acquired another property worth P5.5 million. Nelson F. Flores, AFP able management and harvesting of the Kikuyu escarpment forests in Kenya.

The BPCP also gave $28,000 funding to a local environmentalist group led by Dan Bennett for the preservation of Polilio Island's monitor lizard.

Carmela Española and her group received $12,500 from the BPCP so it can protect the habitat of the Calayan rail (Gallirallus calayanensis), a rare bird species discovered in the Babuyan Group of Islands in May last year.

A total of $600,000 or grants ranging between $7,500 to $75,000 were given to 28 different conservation teams chosen from over 400 applicants.

The awards were given on June 23 at the Smithsonian Institution's National Museum of the American Indian in Washington DC. Renowned environmentalist and Harvard professor Edward O. Wilson was the guest of honor.

The BP Conservation Programme is a partnership initiative between British Petroleum, the Wildlife Conservation Society, BirdLife International, Fauna and Flora International and Conservation International. The program aims to develop and support the skills and networks of future generations of conservation professionals who are working to address global biodiversity conservation priorities at a local level.

Severely endangered

The Philippine crocodile (Crocodylus mindorensis) is the most severely endangered crocodile in the world. The species was rediscovered in 1999 in Luzon, which led to the establishment of the Crocodile Rehabilitation, Observance and Conservation (CROC) Project, funded by the BP Conservation Programme in 2002 and 2003.

The $75,000 award will enable CROC Project, a community-based research, observance and conservation project, to continue to work with the critically endangered Philippine crocodile, a freshwater species of which, there are approximately only 50 left, in Northern Luzon.

The CROC Project is the first group to implement conservation activities for the species. The once-rampant hunting of the crocodiles has ceased and there has been a two-fold increase in the non-hatchling population size.

A local conservation organization, the Mabuwaya Foundation Inc., was also established to spearhead the Philippine crocodile conservation activities in Luzon.

With continued support from the BPCP, the foundation is confident it will become a full-fledged independent and effective organization focused on Philippine crocodile and wetland conservation by the end of 2007.

Monitoring the lizard

The preservation of Polilio Island's monitor lizard received $28,000 in funding to further study and preserve the endemic amphibians known locally as bayawak.

The environmentalist group led by Dan Bennett will use nonintrusive methodologies developed on Polilio Island, Quezon Province, to investigate the distribution and status of the monitor lizard in the remaining forest fragments of Luzon and its adjacent islands, and to identify key conservation resources.

For rare Calayan rail

After accidentally discovering an endemic flightless bird now called the Calayan rail (Gallirallus calayanensis), in the Babuyan Islands in May last year, Carmela Española sought funding from the BPCP to preserve the bird species that can only be found in the Philippines.

The rail is the size of a small crow with dark brown plumage and bright orange red legs and beak. Calayan residents said they used to catch the rail, locally known as pid-ing, for food, unaware it was a rare species.

BPCP gave $12,500 to Española's group to determine the species' actual conservation threat status and to define the boundaries of a planned protected area in the Babuyan Islands.

"We will conduct baseline research on the rail's population and distribution. The proposed project will produce a thorough threat assessment for the rail and its habitat and formulate workable conservation measures in collaboration with local government units, nongovernment organizations and other institutions," Española said in an interview.

She added that the playback census technique will be used in assessing the rail's population and distribution.

"Our study will include notes on the habitat requirements, threats and ecology of the Calayan rail based on field observations and from interviews with local people," Española said.

"We want to launch an environmental education campaign in schools and forest communities. We want to conduct workshops with stakeholders so we can draw a conservation action plan for the Calayan rail," she said.

Flash floods alert raised in Quezon, Aurora

THE TYPHOON Trueni, watched as possible flash floods again warning Quezon and Aurora provinces as tropical depression "Trueni" crosses the country tomorrow.

Picking winds of 30 kph, Trueni was spotted east northeast of Iloilo, Quezon early yesterday morning and moving toward central Luzon by noon presently.

The Philippine Atmospheric Geophysical and Astronomical Administration issued a warning No. 3 to Luzon at 11 a.m. yesterday and mentioned Quezon and Aurora, the two provinces that were threatened by tropical cyclonic storm, could again be endangered.

"It is impossible in terms of wind strength, but landslides and flash floods are usually caused by slick rainfall, like Trueni can send such value happened in Quezon," said National Chief, Pagasa weather branch chief.

He said Trueni, the fifth storm to hit the country this year, would affect Camarines Sur, Palawan Island, Aurora, Bulacan, Pangasinana, Nueva Ecija, Zambales, Pampanga, Quezon, Surigao, Misamis, Benguet, Baguio, La Union and Ilocos Sur.

One said tropical depression usually send such rain but had little wind strength. Several days of continuous rain could trigger landslides, he said.

Some places which may not even have witnessed tropical storms could just be waiting for a triggering mechanism, like intense earthquakes, before coming in, he said.

But the weather station said more signal No. 1 could occur a hint for issuing a notice in response.

"They (weather) are in the best position to know if they should evacuate. They know the place, they can monitor changes in land and air," he said. Their decision can be based on experience," Cruz said.

The average rainfall for storm signal No. 3 is around 100 mm in 24 hours, Cruz said.

The volume of rainfall during the tropical cyclones that hit Quezon and Aurora in late 2004 reached 300 mm in 24 hours, Cruz said. The rain had been going on for at least a week before the typhoon struck, he said.

The resulting floods and landslides left 149 people dead, hundreds more injured and around P143 million worth of damage to public structures and agriculture in the two provinces.

Cruz said a similar disaster could hit the southern Luzon provinces if landslide timing, following days of continuous rain.

"But we have just monitored any more tropical cyclones coming the monsoon yet," he said.

Pagasa is waiting for the acquisition of two Doppler radars that could predict the volume of rainfall for every tropical cyclone.

"It would greatly improve our forecasting," Cruz said. Manila Bulletin

1st Reading: Luke 12:1-5

2nd Reading: Gal 3:23-25, 43-46, 1-5

Psalm: 124

Matthew 10:1-7

Jesus called his twelve disciples to become apostles and to go forth into the world to preach the Gospel. He gave them authority over the demons and to drive them out and to heal every disease and ailment.

These are the names of the twelve apostles: first Simon, called Peter, and his brother Andrew, James, the son of Zebedee, and his brother John, Philip and Bartholomew, Thomas and Matthew, the tax collector, James, the son of Alphaeus, and Thaddaeus, Simon, the Cananite, and Judas Iscariot, the betrayer, who would betray him.

Jesus sent them twelve on missions with the instruction: "Go out and preach in every town and do not carry a sack or a staff. Go in peace to the household of the people of Israel."

"Go and preach in every town. The kingdom of Heaven is near."

Commentary

Jesus calls his disciples to come and give their authority to continue his work... as if he were a prophet and a sign and a seal to the people of Israel and witness that Jesus is the Son of God. They are named but collectively called the twelve - a remnant of the people, not in its own power but in God's mercy and they are given a mission to their own people first - the lost sheep of the house of Israel and to the Gentiles (which is the same in number and weight every nation). The message is clear - the kingdom of God is near and the people of Israel are to be the first to hear the good news of the kingdom of God. The kingdom of God is near and the people of Israel are to be the first to hear the good news of the kingdom of God.

Protesters, police clash ahead of G8 Summit

SCARBOROUGH, Ontario — Protesters lined up the front street of the world's oldest city of G8 summit in Scotland, clashing with police in Edinburgh and facing the police of Scotland's main northern city of Glasgow.

Protesters and anti-globalization demonstrators in the former capital of the United Kingdom clashed with police in Edinburgh and Glasgow.

Police also clashed with people in Glasgow, Scotland, when more than 700 mostly young protesters—clashing, burning streets, or taking to the streets—were taken to the police station.

The protest brought many lines of riot police to the streets, which looked like the world's largest outdoor museum.

Some 20 police officers and demonstrators were injured in Edinburgh, some of whom seriously hurt. Police also clashed with protesters in about 1,000.

At night, when the rain began to fall, riot police started to push back—then they were told to keep back.

"The police were too brutal, they were too violent, they were too aggressive," said one 19-year-old, who was arrested in London.

On the day during the day, protesters were told to move to a "peace zone" in the city center.

Gov't scored for ignoring Metro, C. Luzon sinking

By Dennis Ojeda
City of San Francisco

THE GOVERNMENT has yet to stop the massive use of ground water, the main cause of the rapid sinking of coastal plains of four Metro Manila towns and three Central Luzon provinces, according to two geologists.

In Manila, Rodriguez and Dr. Ricardo Rodriguez, both of the National Institute of Geological Sciences of the University of the Philippines, said they started local and national officials about the problem four years ago.

They said some coastal towns in Manila Bay—Calabarzon, Marikina, Marikina and Marikina—had lost 10 to 15 centimeters of ground water in some of 15 to 20 years because of the problem.

AMRSP JOINT BOARD STATEMENT

"...your faithful ones pray to you in time of distress..." (Psalm 32: 6)

Once again, our beloved country is rocked by political turbulence and crisis. In this situation of confusion and stress, we, the Joint Executive Board of the Association of Major Religious Groups in the Philippines (AMRSP), wish to share with our members and all people of good will our determination of principle and principles to guide our common search for truth and justice.

We believe that any solution to our present crisis must be governed by the Constitution and the laws of our land, for the sake of the future of our country and the good of our people. We reject any solution that involves violence.

We call for accountability to the nation on the part of the President. We find the admitted phone conversation with a Cardinal Official reprehensible and unworthy of the Office of the President. We don't consider it a mere lapse of judgment especially given the content and the frequency. This goes deeper and casts a shadow on one's personal integrity. An apology is not enough. Our people have a right to know the full truth. To this end, we support the creation of a constitutional and independent body composed of women and men of proven integrity, who will swiftly and impartially determine for the nation the authenticity and true meaning of the truth. If injustice has been done, appropriate reparation must be demanded of its perpetrators.

We believe that there is a need for rekindling of everyone's attention on what really matters: the plight of our people, especially the poor. We therefore call for speedy and authentic reforms, especially for the sake of humanity of our people who suffer from the lack of food, clothing, shelter and education. Alleviating the plight of the poor, of those who suffer especially during these hard times of increasing costs of energy, high prices of basic necessities and massive unemployment must be given priority. Issues that affect the lives of the poor, such as the foreign debt, the destruction of the environment caused by logging and mining, land reform program delayed and denied, high prices and low wages, must be seriously considered. Violations of human rights such as summary killings and intimidations must be decisively addressed. Government and its institutions, such as the COMELEC, the Cabinet, and other government agencies and corporations must be quickly purged of corrupt elements.

In a situation of confusion and heated emotions, we call on our members and all people of good will to remain sober, vigilant, and carefully discerning. We join our sisters and brothers in the Church, business, religious and lay people in calling for prayer, discernment and in keeping alive the spirit of hope in this seemingly hopeless situation. We believe that these troubled times call most of all for prayer and discernment. We need to be for God's help, for the light God alone can give us, so that we can find solutions that will truly be for the lasting good of our people, especially the poor. The times now, call for patience and conversion, for such as is, in a sense, a part of the problem, as well as part of the solution to the ill of our country.

Because of this, we invite all our members and sisters and brothers to make July 7 - the 112th anniversary of the founding of the Katipunan - and July 16 - the Feast of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel - special days of prayer and fasting in our communities for a true discernment towards truth, justice and peace. We are convinced that, if we turn to our loving God, we shall find the light, strength, and hope we need, to move forward again as a people, to help create the future that this good and gracious God desires for our suffering people.

Major's gun used in Santiago slay Mum's the word from Dys

By Margue C. Ortiz and Terra V. Quintanilla

THE GUN used by the primary suspect in shooting to death the slain actress Liza Soberano outside an upscale bar in Makati City last month apparently belongs to a Marine major, according to officials of the National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) and the Philippine National Police (PNP). The officers were wounded in the incident.

NBI Director Benjamin Alencas said they would trace a signature on the Makati murder weapon and ask him to explain how he got involved in the hands of suspect Oliver Antonio (alias), a 32-year-old man who was arrested in the case.

Antonio, however, led to a twist. The suspect said he remembered receiving a gun by a friend who had been involved in a shooting outside a bar in Makati City.

It's shoe time

who wanted to buy shoes for his yellowed but never worn shoes but this way I must say he had good sense, though. There was that semi-infanting old couple who told him while they looked around. Then there was the lady who came inside, asked the man three times, left, and came back after 10 minutes, accompanied by the man's brother, before finally deciding, "Mind as he may choose."

Power sanders

Overall, the job search is considerably difficult as I thought it would be, probably because there seems during general workdays to be less choice than the other sections of displacement seems during back-to-school, Christmas, or 90 percent off sale seasons.

I found out a lot of things about Filipino customers, but what struck me most was that they seldom smiled back at salesclerks, or returned a greeting, or said "Thank you" before leaving. They exactly were bothered to say, "No, thanks. I'm just looking."

True, some entrepreneurs can get quite annoying when they hover around you and are like all those part-time potential buyers, but most customers tend to forget the rules of common courtesy as well. I don't want this to sound like a weekly rant, but "it's not my own fault to be a much better place" line, but you still deny the fact that we could allow a good deal of respect for the people who work their tails off just to make shopping a pleasant experience for us.

So, yeah, I guess I'll have to give it to a good old sister ending. Being a short sublight for 4 days helped me learn to appreciate those sublight moments. And yes, I loved way more than 30 minutes. Ha.
